PILCHARD FISHERMEN

B&W 9½ mins. 35mm 850 ft.

The pilchard fishermen in New Zealand's Marlborough Sounds haul their nets by night. At dawn carrier pigeons fly from the boats to the canning factory with reports of the size of the catch so that when the boats come in all is ready for immediate processing of the fish.

SPRING ROUND-UP ON MOLESWORTH.

Molesworth Station lies in the Marlborough high country where the Government is regenerating half a million acres of once derelict sheepland. Pilots in light planes seek out the cattle and radio directions to the men, who, with their horses and dogs, round up the mobs from gullies among the hills. As the cattle are moved out, planes drop poisoned carrots behind them to combat the rabbits which menace the region. After some five weeks' work the cattle are transferred to new summer grazing grounds and the big round-up is over for another year.

THE LIFE OF OPO. 559 ft.

Movies of nearly 50 years ago show the famous dolphin "Pelorus Jack" guiding ships as he did for 30 years before 1916 and films of 1956 show the crowds flocking to the tiny settlement of Opononi and seeing all the amusing tricks of the friendly dolphin which so greatly endeared herself to all New Zealanders, and in her short life became world-famous.

In the north-east corner of the South Island is the province of Marlborough. Whalers and sealers came before English settlers arrived with their cattle and sheep. Farming is the backbone of the province's life, and sheltered waters of the Marlborough Sounds, which have 600 miles of coastline, are the finest cruising grounds in New Zealand for small boats.
